

. . Equine and sheep foetuses in utero: transplacental passage of Hepatitis E virus. Two maternal sheep were inoculated intravenously with blood from a naturally Hepatitis E virus-infected foal. One sheep received  $66 \times 10^6$  TCID<sub>50</sub> of virus in the first experiment and  $60 \times 10^6$  TCID<sub>50</sub> in the second. In the first experiment there was evidence of infection by the third week and in the second experiment the second week. Virus was detected in foetal blood by reverse transcriptase (RT) assay at 14 days in both experiments. Hepatitis E virus was isolated at 42-45 days (first experiment) and at 29-30 days (second experiment) of gestation. Virus was detected in foetuses at 8 days post-infection (first experiment) and 5 days post-infection (second experiment). Non-inoculated sheep served as controls for both experiments. The tissue distribution of viral antigen was determined by immunohistochemistry in both experiments. Organ distribution was as follows: foetal liver and gall bladder in the first experiment; foetal liver, gall bladder and brain in the second. Virus was not isolated from any of the organs of the foetus or sheep from the control group. In all experiments, virus was isolated from the foetus only. Some of the mother sheep developed antibody to Hepatitis E virus in both experiments.

My question is that after converting an xls/xlsx file into a byte array, how can I find the number of bytes? Is there any library that can give me that result? or any formula or one-line code? Any help is appreciated A: There is a Format-Bytes.ps1 script that will allow you to get your file size in bytes - then you can determine the number of bytes in a byte array by using: var size =

---

File.GetLastWriteTime(filepath).TotalSeconds
* 1024 * 1024; var bytes = new byte[size];
